Executive Summary

Background

The 2017 REDC Guidebook charges the Workforce Workgroup with surveying both industries and educational institutions in our regions to identify the skills gaps as well as the programmatic availability of workforce training opportunities in high schools, community colleges and universities. The North Country Regional Economic Development Workgroup along with representation from the Community College Council have surveyed and collaborated on this project.

Given the short time frame in which to complete this task, the group quickly identified occupations and surveyed businesses within the strategic sectors located in the North Country. These sectors are transportation, manufacturing, agriculture and hospitality. The tasks were divided amongst the members and then compiled into the report. This has resulted in two types of instruments that were used to survey. In order to provide a more comprehensive report, more time would be needed and sample sizes would have to be calculated. The results of the survey has provided the insights needed for Workforce professionals and their partners to work on closing the skills gaps that exist in the region.

The employers were surveyed in Phase I of the project and then the training opportunities were compiled. The results of the survey are put together so that it is user friendly and can be a tool in mapping viable occupations and training opportunities for both students, current workers and businesses.

The North Country as a whole has a plethora of training and educational opportunities to meet the current and future needs of its employers. However, not all programs are available in all areas of the NCREDC territory. Depending upon interest and career direction, an individual may have to travel or relocate within the region to obtain the desired or necessary training or college degree.

The North Country employment picture may differ from the national or state profiles. The statistics related to the types and number of jobs may differ depending upon the data collected and geographic focus. The types and size of industries, seasonal flux, regional economic conditions and reporting formats may also influence the data.

Observations, Challenges and Strategies

Observations

1. Employers throughout the North Country often require a small number of employees to fill a need within an organization. The small number of employees needed does not support the creation of new training programs. However, this does support the need for apprenticeships, On-the-Job training and online training programs.
2. While the region provides many and varied trainings, not all training opportunities are available within all areas or within a realistic travelling distance for job seekers.
3. Companies are looking for specific training offerings for incumbent workers, either to reinforce present skills or to expand skills and knowledge.
 - a. These are generally smaller companies where it is cost prohibitive to have training in-house for a small number of employees. Therefore, companies either forego the training or spend the training budget to address the need.
 - b. Companies are often unaware of local training options despite the best efforts of the community colleges, BOCES and other third party trainers.
 - c. Employers are looking for targeted training that is non-credited and satisfies a specific need within the company.
 - d. Training providers need to create and expand micro-credentials and online degrees.
4. Employers are not familiar with training programs and opportunities in the area.
5. Employers throughout the North Country are looking for and concerned about recruiting and retaining skilled workers. The number may be small at each company (i.e. one maintenance mechanic, instrumentation technician, electrician or machinist/tool maker) but these are critical positions to keep the processes going and to maintain the facility. There are some companies that utilize the NYS Registered Apprenticeship program, while others develop their own programs or recruit from outside of the area.
6. The most common observation from all employers is regarding the need for professional skills (formally known as soft skills) for entry level applicants. The applicant may have the technical skill to do the specific job they are being considered for, but are lacking in skills such as communication, problem solving, teamwork, punctuality or passing a drug test.
7. Employers are projecting a need for middle skill level positions.

Challenges

1. Connecting in-house and external training opportunities has been a challenge. The Workforce Development Board (WDB) should seek to explore apprenticeship programs. Boards will look to explore formalized trainings rather than seek apprenticeship programs. The NYS DOL needs to be more visible and make the process user-friendly to draw businesses to their programs. While individual offerings are available, no coordinated NYS DOL regional efforts exist.
2. Current elementary & high school programs are not incorporating project-based and problem solving learning techniques in everyday teaching methods.
3. Federal and state budget cuts have limited available training funds at a time of transition in workforce needs. More flexible funding needs to be made available.
4. Hosting interns and co-ops requires planning and takes significant work on the part of the participating business.
5. Employers often cannot complete the apprenticeship training outlines over the required years along with providing the formalized training requirements. Smaller companies do not have the staff and know-how to run On-the-Job trainings and apprenticeship programs.
6. The process of becoming a sponsor and participating in a registered apprenticeship program offers employers the ability to pull talented workers within organizations and provide them with a pathway to expand their skills. The NYS DOL needs to be more engaged with companies to educate employers in order to develop more programs.
7. When required qualifications were reviewed, most companies wanted 3 to 5 years of experience.
8. A challenge for employers is to retain and attract people from outside the area due to the difficulty of often having to offer low wages.

Strategies

1. Promote and collaborate with training providers such as CITEC, the Workforce Development Institute (WDI) and colleges and universities to provide core or foundational skills for training participants within businesses online or face-to-face.
2. Create opportunities for multiple employers to collectively offer training. Science and technology is changing so rapidly that there is an increasing need for the retraining of employees.
3. Provide meaningful career exploration opportunities for students to prepare them for in demand careers.
4. Create career pathways partnering high schools, community colleges, colleges and universities. Begin to develop workforce skills, critical thinking skills and problem solving skills through project-based learning beginning in elementary school to high school through p-tech programs and innovation hubs.
5. Support and promote Science, Technology, Engineering & Math (STEM) education and 21st Century skill sets in pre-school through high school through project-based learning.
6. Workforce Development Boards (WDBs), WDI, CITEC & economic development boards should collaborate on efforts to promote training opportunities.
7. Employers should provide opportunities to their employees to provide progress overall. Internships and co-ops should be encouraged as only at 20% of businesses currently offered these opportunities.
8. Employers should expand intern and co-op opportunities for students to develop skills and to gain experience to meet requirements in critical areas.

Additional Responses

- The County is made up of companies that distribute product, and so prior skills using UPS & Fed Ex software would be helpful
- Personality/Customer Service Skills
- Big Issue- lots of understanding of how manufacturing works
- There perhaps should be a "never" in 19 and 20
